Synopsis of the lecture

The explosion of electronic data has created a "digital landfill" of unmanaged and ungoverned information where it's critical for organizations to intensify their efforts to address and comply with global and local regulatory and legal requirements.

Information Governance is a methodology by which organizations can manage their physical and electronic records, documents and data to improve efficiencies, reduce risk and drive compliance with regulatory requirements.

Legal hold is an important step in Information Governance, which involves companies preserving all forms of relevant electronic or paper records when a litigation or investigation is reasonably anticipated. This session will explain the fundamentals of Information Governance and Legal Hold and identify some of the potential challenges and go-forward strategies associated with managing data and information in today's "digital" environment.
